Biography

Dr. Harold E. Briggs has worked extensively on how child welfare, mental health, and substance abuse systems service providers include adult consumer, youth, and family voice and use evidence to improve child, adult, and family well-being. Also, he conducts research on safe and risky sex practices among youth. Dr. Briggs has been involved in partnerships integrating academic, community and system change efforts that have strategically benefited community-based organizations serving people of color and university settings. He seeks to lead and partner with faculty, students, civic, philanthropy, business, and grassroots community groups and other interprofessional stakeholders to advance child welfare, health disparities and behavioral health knowledge that furthers reduction in inequalities, promote well-being and human potential. He is an advocate for civil and human rights, economic and community development, and resilient youth and family life. Through an equal justice foundation, he forges strategic alliances. Through these partnerships he seeks to increase the School of Social Work's rank and distinction as a world class center of learning conducting grant funded scientific developments and grand challenges child welfare, family support in children's mental health, and youth sexual health research to achieve equality, social changes, racial respect and uplift, broadly defined.
